Death of a Noted Character. Dr. Louis De Silva, alias Cardoza, noted bigamist, lecturer, and practical romancer, who was in this city a year or so ago and made an engagement to lecture for the Library Association and ran away without keeping it, was killed on the 30th of May at Fort Sedgwick, about four hundred miles west of Canada. De Silva was an extraordinary character, but nothing is known of his early history ex cept what he himself choose to tell. He was a man of varied acquirements, talking fluently in all the modern languages was familiar with Latin and writings of the Roman Catholic fathers, had traveled in many countries, and was a most reck less and unconscionable rascal. It is said that he was once sentenced to be garrotle in Havana, and that he was with Maximilian in Mexico; it is certain that he had deserted four times from the Federal army, and had married more wives than any man in America, except Brigham Young. Shut up in a cell, with no book within reach but a German Bible he had written for the press column after column concerning his personal adventures with Gen. Prim in Spain; and though the whole story, so far as he was concerned, was probably pure fiction, every circumstance connected with Prim's movements would be found to be historically correct, even to the distance given by De Silva between the different cities and places mentioned in his narrative. In March, he jumped from a train of cars white heavily ironed, and broke his leg; only thirteen lays afterward he escaped from Fort Sedgwick in his crippled condition, and Sedgwick in his crippled condition. sedgwick in his crippied condition, and was subsequently found lying helpless on the prairie, covered with snow and with both feet badly frozen. After being taken back to the fort, and having his feet properly dressed, he remained telerably quiet until the 30th of May, when he went review yesterday, was a brilliant affair. nder guard to the sutler's shop, became intolerated, and got into a quarrel, and was finally shot by the soldier who had him in charge. De Silva was well known in many parts of the country. By some he was believed to be insane; but unless a total lack of moral principle is insanity, there appears to have been no good reason. The Gallantry of Gen. Noyes. the Editor of the New York T

The announcement of Gen. Noyes as a gubernatorial candidate for the State of Ohio, calls up an interesting episode of his carees.

Probably there are but few, beside my self, so circumstanced as to be able to write of the act of intrepid gallanty that

Ti was the fight of Nickajack Creek, July 4, 1884. Gen. Fuller was ordered with his brigade to develop to the enemy's left, to see how far in those dense woods their lines and works extended, and what they were composed of It was a bright, hot and beautiful day. Gen. Fuller, with consummate skill, moved his skirmishers as far forward as possible and hastily threw up a line of breastworks for one regiment. Behind each flank of this regiment in line of battle, was a regiment of ment in line of battle, was a regiment column doubled on the centre, ready to deploy instantly in any direction that might be needed. The Fourth Regiment, Col. Noyes, was reserved for the charge. When everything was ready, Col. Noves asked Gen. Fuller, who was standing in the asked Gen. Fuller, who was statuted be per road on the line of battle, that he be per mitted to give the order to charge by word of mouth instead of the bugle, which he said would apprise the enemy, while the quieter order would give his men at least two minutes advantage of the ene-my. Gen. Fuller replied, "No; sound the necepted O'Baldwin's challenge, offering to fight him for any amount from $3,500 to $10,000. Mace is willing to give O'Baldwin his own time, but prefers that the fight should take place near New Orleans. Mace will probably train under Tom Allen at the Washington House, four miles from St. Louis. Tom Kelly is mentioned as O'Baldwin's trainer. Allen will put up $2,000 on Mace.
